Comments	I understood government directives were to work toward reducing pollution and resultant climate change not to add to it. To build this massive energy waste centre in this area would be criminal. The proposal is for an astronomically massive and toweringly high development which would be seen across this beautiful landscape for miles. It would turn this very precious piece of countryside and currently clean environment into a huge industrial site which would be polluting the surrounding area, wildlife and fauna, however could this be acceptable or agreeable to locals, and/or backed with planning permission by the local authority? Yes we need to deal with our waste but let's get sustainably conscious and with a realistic plan which doesn't have such a negative impact on the area, the roads, the air quality, the locals and the environment.
