Comments	The proposed Incineration plant has clearly not taken into account any current local plans of the Arun District. I particularly refer to the housing development on the Ford Airfield site. It would be a total waste of time and money to build these as, despite the housing shortage, they will be blighted before even the first brick is laid and will be virtually unsaleable. Not only will the visual aspect of the local environment be ruined by a complex of disproportionate size, but the air quality will be disastrously affected not only by the volatile/gaseous effluent of the plant, but the large increase in heavy lorries moving to and from the site will add to the local air pollution as well as traffic congestion on what are generally smallish country roads. A structure of this size will be an eyesore seen from far and wide, especially from the beautiful National Park of the South Downs and the gaseous effluent will almost certainly pollute the air in many parts of the park; it may well upset the tourist industry of Arundel and its associated seaside towns. At a time when our country has the chance to set a course change with regard to the environment and quality of life, this proposed development ticks absolutely NO boxes whatsoever. What ever are they thinking !!!
