Comments	I think that apart from being a massive blot on the landscape, these things are suggested to be built on hilltops with no farming around due to contamination. There's already a housing estate close by let alone a new one about to be built. There will be schools in close proximity. With all things considered the pollutants that will come out the overloaded roads that can't deal with the traffic that are only going to get worse. The added pollution from these vehicles and with the burning pollution added will to our already fragile environment. If power is required go for renewable energies and beef up local recycling. The other issue will be the smell as the wind will drive it down. The WHO say that these should not be built in occupied areas or even in farm areas due to contamination getting in the food chain. We have both in the area. If this was declined before then it should be declined again and stop trying to keep putting in applications that have been declined.
