Comments	The proposed structure is still far too big and will serve to "industrialise" this beautiful stretch of coastine. This area relies heavily on tourism and leisure and must remain attractive as that for the benefit of the wider economy. The noxious fumes will be trapped over the area by the prevailing winds, blocked to the north by the downs and air quality for hundreds of thousands of residents will be compromised. These incinerators are a lazy approach to the problem and cause a great deal of pollution, which is why many other countries have banned them. This type of facility should be built further east along the coast where it is already more industrialised, in an area that is not so dependant on tourism. The traffic considerations are also not practical since the roads are not up to the increase in traffic
