It could be see for miles when one factors in not only the stacks but also the plumes. In addition the roads in the area are already not capable of dealing with the traffic and there are housing developments all over the area. Heavy lorries would again destroy the area and overwhelm the roads. Lastly, incinerators are a terrible way of disposing of refuse and generating energy. They are hugely inefficient and polluting. Given that the UK has just set itself more stringent targets in terms of carbon, this is ridiculous. It is highly likely that the use of incinerators will stop entirely in 5 to 10 years. In short, these plans must not be passed.
