Comments	In all of the fields surrounding the old airfield site and proposed incinerator/ energy recovery facility there are significant numbers of observation boreholes indicating that the whole area is likely to be designated for future housing and educational establishments. Surrounding a new incinerator with what will be a new town does not seem to be a particularly bright idea. This is especially so when the 'new' application for a reduced footprint building but higher/ more complicated chimney structure indicates that the applicants are having difficulties with both building line and particularly their emision air dispersion modelling . This construction should not be allowed in this location. An incinerator for the area is probably required given area waste arisings but a better site should be located at a higher altitude to aid air dispersion and where there are fewer people/ residential areas. The best location in the broad area would seem to be in Slindon where better air dispersion with height and fewer people would achieve a better result all round. Whilst Slindon is in the Park, the site could be easily disguised given the varied topography and tree cover.
