It will negatively affect the visual outlook of the surrounding area permanently. In the context of the South Downs National Park and the wide range of listed buildings in the immediate area it truly beggars belief that a planning process would have concluded that this was a good option. Also, this type of development would seem to be at odds with local plans to deliver more housing and schooling. How are are these initiatives compatible ? I would also point out that the road infrastructure is already limited, as evidenced by the A27 Arundel bypass plans, so introducing yet more lorries onto local roads seems very poorly thought out. Furthermore, and perhaps most importantly, why on earth do we think building more incineration capacity is the answer ? It's environmentally damaging and it seems a much better idea to use the available capacity while focusing on improving and developing other forms of
