Comments	The proposed sighting of the incinerator is on the edge of an area of outstanding natural beauty, ie. the South Downs National Park. To have such an ugly structure clearly visible, would be an abomination. Once it starts operating, with plumes of noxious smoke and gases, it must surely impact on the number of people who might visit the area. Which could severely affect the local economy, which has already suffered during the previous two years. More importantly, this unwanted pollution will undoubtedly be a huge problem for the new housing and the people who would be buying them. Which most probably would include a good number of people with small children, whose health would be severely adversely affected, as would the general population for miles around. Being, as the height of the chimneys are equivalent to that of Chichester Cathedral's Spire. The council already appear to have enough incinerators, So why build more? The burning of waste also negates the need for recycling and, it goes against climate change. Which the government has pledged to tackle. Plus, much more pollution would be created by the vast increase of lorries using and consequently, clogging the local roads.
