Dear Count Planning,

I am writing to lodge me strong objection to the above application. I live on Ford Road and the fallout, in many different ways, will have a serious impact on myself and all of the people living on Ford Road, together with all of Arundel itself.

The height of these towers means we will have the polluted air that will only add to the pollution we have to suffer from traffic building up on Ford road daily, engulfing our town day and night.

We will have massively increased back up of traffic on the road as a result of the huge increase in heavy lorries trying to get through the bottleneck at the Arundel end.

If we have learned nothing from the past year and a half surely we must at least recognise that we need to protect our planet, this would be a devastating blow to all the good work that is being done to improve emissions locally, nationally and worldwide. How can anyone think this is a good idea?

There is another application for a further 90 houses on Ford Road, along with all the additional 1,500 houses, schools and infrastructure, where in the overall plan is it appropriate to build an incinerator.

Surely it must be obvious that this is a massively negative threat to our South Downs National Park, the historic town of Arundel, two of the country's little jems that people travel for miles to enjoy, do we seriously need to destroy it?

I very much hope that common sense prevails in this instance and that this absurd application is rejected for all of the above reasons.

Regards,

Roisin O'Neill
