Comments	It's truly baffling how this proposal can even be considered. At a time when the need to preserve our precious woodlands and habitats has never been greater, from a multitude of standpoints including ecological, mental and physical health, this proposal flies in the face of that need. Given the end product is not in short supply, how does the end justify the means? As a dog walker, horse rider and someone who cares about the environment in which they live, I object to this in the strongest possible terms. How out of touch is it possible for one proposal to be ?
