Comments	<input type="text" value="Loxwood, at one point considered a village, is undergoing something a transformation. With four new housing developments either on-going, or planning approved, the addition of the clay pits would, to my mind, dramatically increase the traffic in an area already struggling in this regard. (There are road closures planned for the following week.) This obviously includes traffic volume concerns, but also those regarding noise and pollution.
None of this is to mention the concern for the ancient woodlands where the development is planned. I wonder how much we'll all talk about combating climate change before we actually act on our talk."/>
