Comments	I strongly object to this ridiculous application. The extraction of clay is a loss leading exercise and has no financial viability. The only users of such quantities of clay would be brick makers who have their own clay pits on site. Buying in clay from a remote workings would be cost prohibitive due to transportation costs. It is plainly an exercise to create a rubbish tip. That this tip would be situated in precious woodlands and destroy countless wildlife, let alone the perversity of destroying trees when we are trying to improve the climate by planting more trees is simply banal. The additional road transport, I.e. taking clay to places where they already have clay is further stupidity that beggars belief; that anyone would consider creating such pollution merely for cash profit, signifies the real greed behind this foray. That access should be via a C class road for the type of HGV 's being proposed is again, insane. The roads in question are capable of standard traffic but two HGV's passing would be tight and on certain sections, absolutely perilous. I therefore ask the officers responsible for deciding this application to refuse this application on the grounds of the detriment to the environment and the lack of financial viability of such an enterprise.
